Check out last week's discussion with

Ahmad Qais Munhazim

Human rights activist Jefferson Professor Ahmad Qais Munhazim is one of millions of Afghans worried for their family members' safety amid the Taliban's quick takeover of the country. Prof Munhazim, who identifies as genderqueer, Muslim and immigrant, was born in the midst of war in Kabul, Afghanistan and raised in Afghanistan and Pakistan. He is intimately familiar with the history of this troubled region and the threats now placed to those remaining in that country due to the recent takeover by the Taliban. If you want to know what is happening there now and why, please listen to his Roundtable given by one who is uniquely aware of the situation.

The Roxboro House Roundtables are interdisciplinary discussions on any topic from health and science, to fashion, economics, and politics. These talks provide an opportunity for students, faculty and staff to explore and consider a variety of themes in the cozy, historical Roxboro House living room. Listen in or join the conversation!
